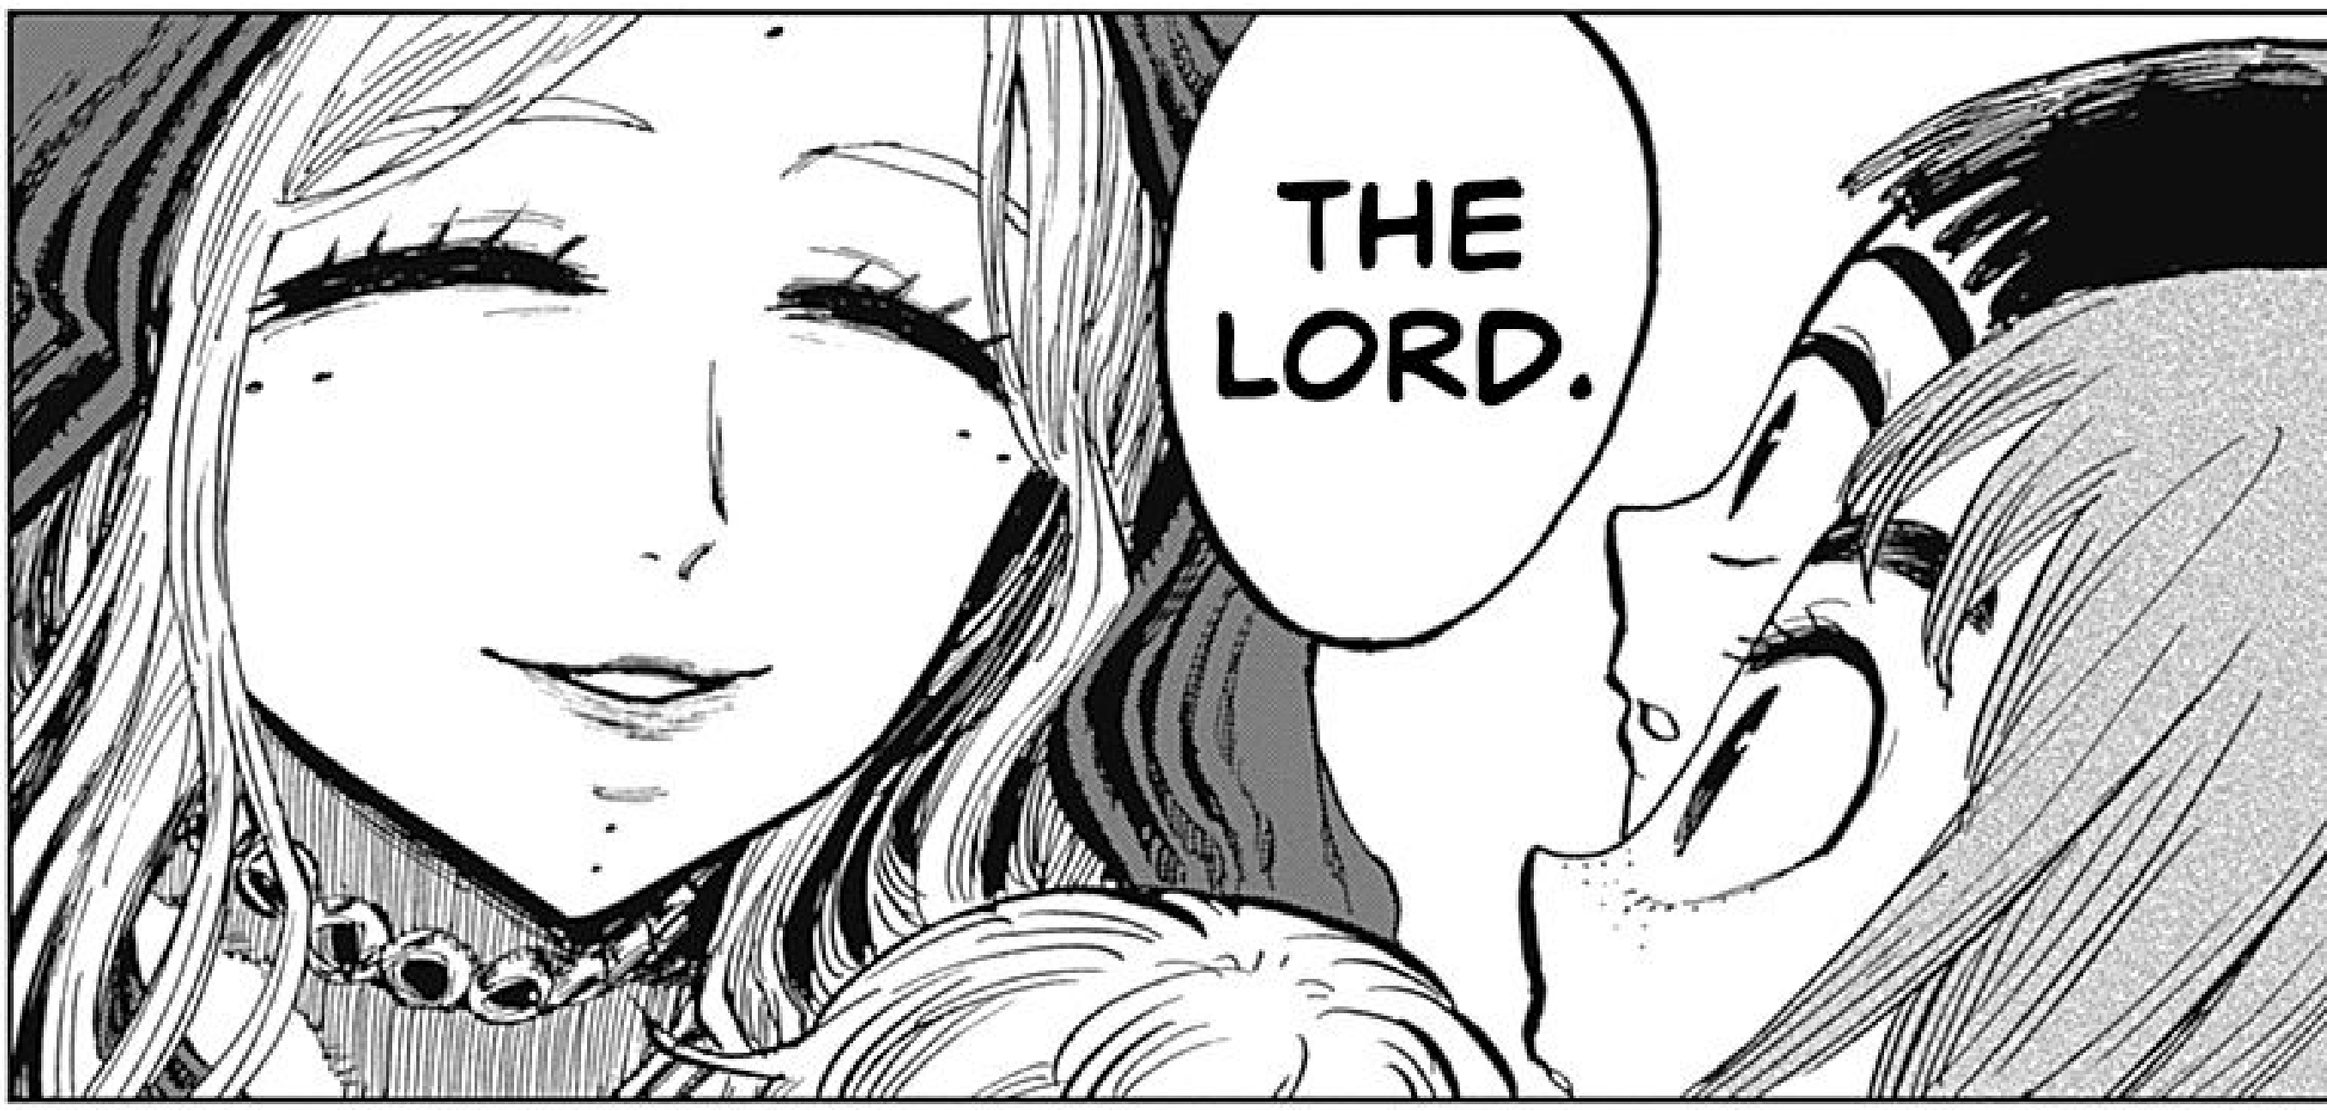
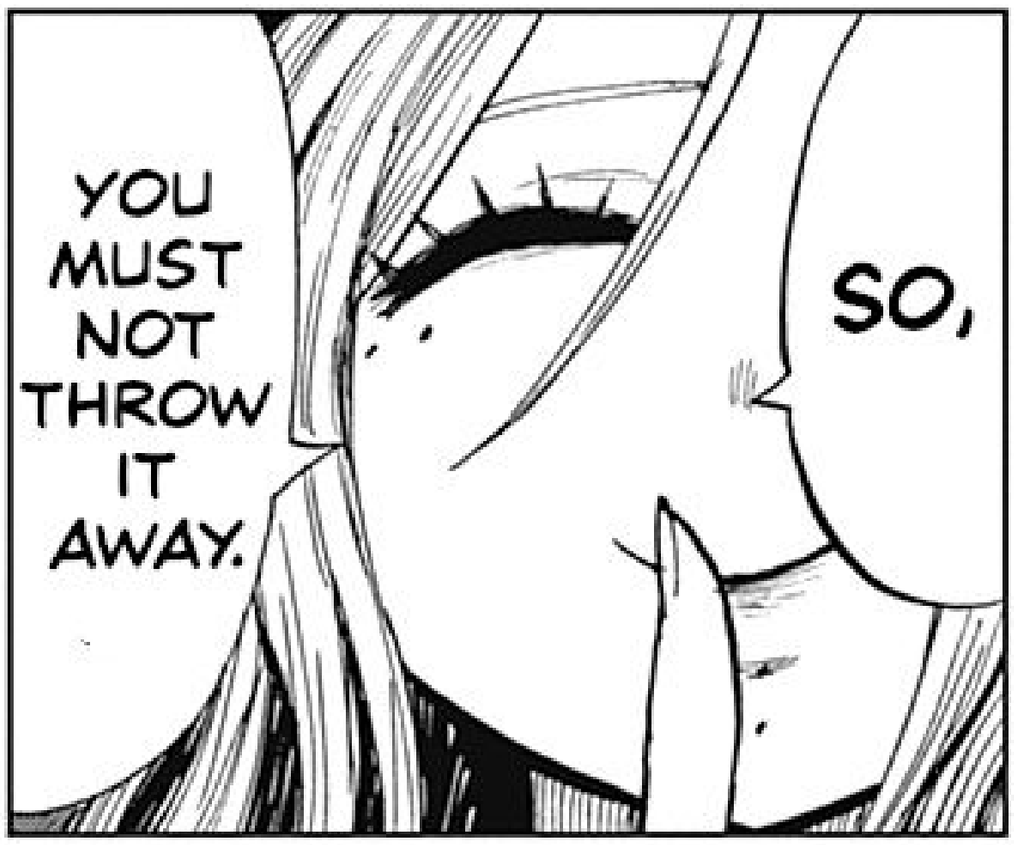
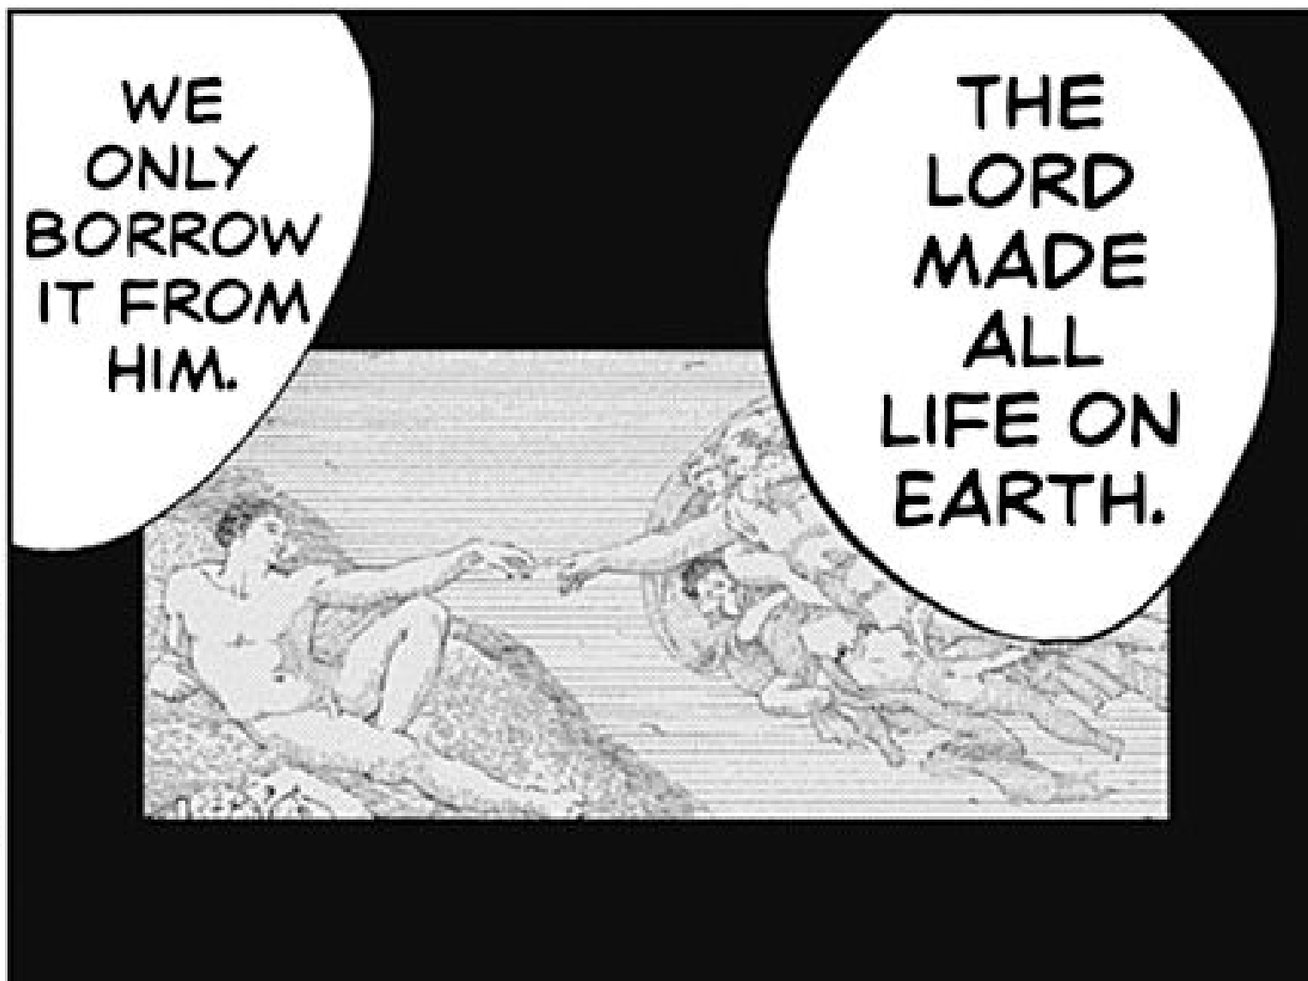
HUH?
WELL WHO MADE OUR LIVES?



THE LORD.



SO,
YOU MUST NOT THROW IT AWAY.



WE ONLY BORROW IT FROM HIM.
THE LORD MADE ALL LIFE ON EARTH.

AND RETURN IT TO GOD AT THE END.

WE MUST CARE FOR OUR BODIES AND SOULS FOR OUR LIFE.

THE LORD SAID "LET THERE BE LIFE," AND YOU CAME INTO EXIST-ENCE.

WHEN YOUR LIFE STAR-TED,

Kaisermutt Translation Notes

Thanks again to Watawheel for the raws.

From what I understand the previous group romanized Yugame's name as Hizumi, which is the standard reading for 歪 as a name, but as with Soru I defer to the furigana that the author gives. I hope that the discontinuity between this and prior scans isn't too jarring, but my main priority is getting it right. I don't think the guys before me did a bad job, but I am continuously baffled by this weird convention of ignoring furigana, the thing that fundamentally tells you how to read a name.

Kuzure's name is spelt 崩姉 and is homophonous with 崩れ (break down), combining its spelling (minus okurigana) with 姉, the character for an older sister.

地雷系 (jirai kei, land mine-type) started out as a term for a hot lady who has a few screws loose. However, it has turned into a fashion movement, emerging on TikTok around the same time as egirl/eboy "vibes" (a word which I will decry from my bully pulpit until the day I die) but instead of looking trashy and sad, jirai kei actually looks good in my opinion (if you can't tell, I am an old man yelling at the sky, do whatever you want and ignore my fashion opinions). It also absolutely fits their look. I went with "is this that new fashion trend" in its place because I'm not using that word in this manga

透け透け (sukesuke) is the onomatopoeia for transparency. A lot of weird confusing onomatopoeia in Japanese isn't actually onomatopoeia, it's weird reduplication or addition of the suffix り spelt in katakana.

Yugame speaks almost entirely in katakana but she uses kanji, which isn't typically the case for stylized speech from robots and Westerners, the typical all-katakana speakers. In short, I don't know why she's speaking in katakana.

She says 草 on page 23. I went with lmao. Fight me.

The page 23 last panel is 寝言は寝て言え (negoto wa neteie, [talk in your sleep/say gibberish] while you're asleep)
